Enable Midstream announces commercial and operations leadership changes

OKLAHOMA CITY (Oct. 24, 2019) - Enable Midstream Partners, LP (NYSE: ENBL) today announced that Chief Operating Officer Craig Harris is leaving the company for a chief executive role at a privately-held midstream energy company.

“Craig’s impact at Enable has been significant, and we appreciate the strong leadership he has provided as the company has achieved meaningful commercial and operational results,” said Rod Sailor, president and CEO. “We wish him the best in his new opportunity.

“I am very pleased to be moving forward with the leadership strength that exists in the COO organization who have been at the heart of Enable’s successes,” said Sailor. Effective Nov. 1, Tina Faraca, senior vice president, Commercial will lead all commercial, business development, and engineering and construction functions, while Frank Antoine, senior vice president, Field Operations will lead operational, technical, and environmental, health, and safety functions. Faraca and Antoine will report directly to Sailor.

Harris will serve until Nov. 1, after which the company will begin a search for its next chief operating officer.

Enable’s recent commercial achievements include the completion of the Wildcat, CaSE and Muskogee projects. It also announced its Gulf Run Pipeline project that will provide a critical link between growing natural gas production in Louisiana and increased demand from Gulf Coast and international markets.
